THE BLESCED HAND.

[There is a legend of Langlish Monk, who did at the Monastery of Aremberg, where he had copied and illuminated many books. h ping to be rewarded in Heaven. Long atter his death lis tomb was opened, and nothing could be seen of his remains but the righhand, with which he had don- his pious work, and which had been miraculously preserved from decay.

For you and ne, who love the light Of God's unclossered day, It were indeed a dreary lot To shut ourselves away From every glad and sunny thing, And pleasant sight and sound, And pass, from out a si ent cell, Into the silent ground.

Not so the good monk, Anselm, thought, For, in his cloiste.'s shade The cheerful faith that lit his heart lis own sweet sun-hine made; And in its glow h prayed and wrote. From matin-song till even, And trusted in the Book of Life,

What holy books his gentle art Finled rull of saintly lore! What pages brightened by his hand, The spiendid missa's bore! What blossoms, almost tragrant, twined Aro ind each bl ssed n me, And how his Saviour's cross and crown Shone out, from cloud and flame!

To read his name in meaven.

But, unto clerk as unto clowr, One summons comes alway, And Brother Anselm heard the call, At vesper-chime, one day. His busy pen was in his hand, His parchment by his side— He bene him o'er the half-writ prayer, Kissed Jesus' name, and ded!

They laid him where a window's blaze, Frashed o'er the graven stone, And seeme i to touch his simple name With pencil like his own; And there he stept, and, one by one,?
His orothers died, the while,
And trooping years wen, by and trod His nam : from off the aisle.

And lifting up the pivem int, then, An Abbot's couch to spread, They let the jewelled sunlight in Where once lay Anselm's head. No crum ling bone was there, no trace Of human dust that told, But, all alone, a warm right hand Lay fresh upon the mould.

It was not stiff, as dead men's are, But with a tender clasp, It seeme t to hold an unseen hand Within its living gra-p, And er - the trembing monks could turn, To hide their dazzled eyes, It rose, as with a sound of wings, Right up into the saies.
